Military compliance board adds three staff members

A military board that ensures activities at Pensacola Naval Air Station comply with federal, state and local environmental regulations doubled in size Monday with the addition of three members.

The Environmental Compliance Board's charter also was changed to cover a more general range of issues, said Harry White, a spokesman for NAS.

When the board was formed in 1987, it included the commanding officer of NAS, the air station's Public Works Center and the Naval Aviation Depot. Membership now includes the USS Lexington, Naval Supply Center and Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office, White said.

The Lexington is a customer of the Public Works Center's industrial wastewater treatment system and hazardous waste disposal shop. The Naval Supply Center procures hazardous materials for Navy activities and runs a huge fuel storage network of pipelines and tanks.

The Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office administers the hazardous waste disposal contract for area Navy activities.

Pensacola's Environmental Compliance Board was the first in the Navy.
