PRESIDENT NARROWLY MISSED INJURY

PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI •
When Haitians realized their National Palace was destroyed, many feared President Rene Preval was dead. It was a near miss.

Preval and his wife, Elisabeth Debrosse Preval, talked about their experience with the quake for the first time Tuesday.

They said they were about to enter their private residence when everything started shaking.

“We froze, then took three or four steps back, and the residence just fell before us,” she said.

Stunned, the first couple sat in their yard as government, police and church officials brought news of tragedy from across the capital.

Then Preval, the police chief, his prime minister and interior minister hired motorcycle taxis and set out touring the damage.

“After I spent the night evaluating the destruction, I realized that I needed to go and organize the relief. Seeing people is not helping people,” Preval said.

“The first thing was to get the phone service back up. The second was to clear the streets.”
