Tomahawks alumni, such as Dan Griffin, a Mountain View High graduate, have made their presence felt on the East Coast, where the game is most popular. Griffin was recently named the most valuable defensive midfielder at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md.

The Tomahawks club features six boys teams: two pups teams for grades four to six; two junior teams for grades seven to eight; a junior varsity team for grades nine to 11 and the varsity team for grades nine to 12. Two girls teams are also available for junior girls (grades six to eight) and high school girls.

Donovan, the assistant coach, said the club aims at getting players started at a young age and keeping them interested as they grow up. In the Central Coast Section, nine schools fielded girls varsity teams and eight had boys varsity teams last season. Donovan wants those numbers to grow.

"As coaches, our job is to make the Tomahawk high school club team extinct," Donovan said. "We can do that by establishing teams at the high school level, and that's our goal."
