What Is Your Company Worth? (And Why You Need To Know)

A recent study* found business owners typically misjudge the value of their businesses by at least 50%. (Owners think the business is worth $X — in fact it is worth $2X or 1/2X.) If your business represents a large part of your net worth, can you afford NOT to know what it is worth?

Most owners wait too long to answer that question. Procrastination can be very expensive. For example if your business is worth more than you think, estate taxes can wipe out your family's inheritance. If you overvalue your company, your retirement nest-egg may be much smaller than you expected. You would be smart to know for certain before you hang out the "for sale" sign.

If you own a business and plan to sell it one day (or pass it along to the next generation), you may need to attend this seminar. Space is limited, so call to reserve your seat today.
