Hangar 1 Community Update

Former NAS Moffett Field

N00296.001040
MOFFETT FIELD
SSIC NO. 5090.3.A.

Background

In 1997, contaminants such as polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs), asbestos and lead (common in building materials in years' past) were found at wetlands near Moffett Field's Hangar 1 and in the hangar's interior and exterior materials. In 2003, the Navy and NASA took temporary actions to prevent harmful effects from the pollution at Hangar 1, including applying a coating on the hangar surface. The coating was expected to last three to five years. The Navy, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and San Francisco Bay Regional Water Quality Control Board agreed that a long-term solution would be necessary.

Finding the Best Solution

To find the best long-term solution, the Navy used a process called an engineering evaluation/cost analysis (EE/CA). This would allow the Navy to find a cleanup remedy in a relatively short time. The Navy realized the importance of involving the public in cleanup efforts and invited the public to attend open houses, a cleanup alternatives workshop and Restoration Advisory Board meetings. The Navy also provided written information to the public. Suggestions from the community were evaluated as part of the EE/CA process.

The EE/CA summarizes the evaluation of 13 alternatives and describes the Navy's recommended alternative. The recommended alternative consists of complete demolition and removal of Hangar 1. Removing the hangar provides the highest degree of protection and will allow for future uses of the site and cleanup of nearby wetlands (Site 25). Because contaminants are embedded in the inner and outer layers of the siding's composition and in the hangar's interior structure, the Navy cannot cost-effectively clean the hangar or rebuild its parts.

Protecting the Environment

The recommended alternative provides the best solution because the contaminant source (the hangar siding and structure) would be completely controlled by removing the source from the site. The Navy is aware that many community members object to demolition of the hangar because of its historic and personal significance. It is important to the Navy's history too. But the number one priority for the Navy is to make Moffett Field environmentally safe. Human health and the environment take precedence over any other issue.

Preserving History

Because the Navy values the historic nature of the hangar, it is working with the State Historic Preservation Office, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation and NASA to ensure future generations can still learn about and appreciate the hangar. The site will be marked to denote the size of the Hangar 1 structure. The Navy is also preserving the history of Hangar 1 by making drawings, photos, interactive archives and an oral history available to the community.

To get more information or comment on this action, please attend the public meeting on Tuesday, May 23. Open House, 5 to 6:45 p.m.; Public Meeting, 7 to 9:00 p.m. at Building 943, Moffett Field, Mountain View, Calif.
