Washington on a bus, but she was determined that they would fly.
"I made sure we had to make a connection at another airport," Grumme said "I wanted them to have a complete experience. They all had one assignment while they were on the trip. They each had a notebook and their task was to write down every occupation they saw from the moment they arrived at the airport. I wanted them to see that there was a whole world out there full of opportunities for them."
They ate ice cream cones on the mall in the capital and danced at a sock hop on a pontoon boat on the Potomac Rivercrest whom's met in college, but a week before he left for Vietnam. After his return, th moved to Virginia and then Memphis to be near some her husband's relatives.
They had two children, Sus and Joann. She and Grumme divorced in 1977.
Grumme spends most of h free time helping her daughters with their four children. Her living room recently w transformed into Cinderella ballroom for her granddaughter's birthday party.
As for Ellendale, Grumme has a crowded school that w see some relief next year wh a new school opens o Rivercrest
