Progress with environmental studies

The Navy has made significant progress with environmental studies being conducted under the Installation Restoration Program (IRP) at Naval Air Station Pensacola. Field work has been completed or is nearing completion at more than half of the 20 sites requiring remedial investigation. Sixteen other sites are undergoing a screening process that will provide the data necessary to determine whether any further investigation is needed.

The field work is part of the remedial investigation (RI) which will provide the first conclusive data on environmental conditions at NAS Pensacola. The RI will determine the
