Byrnes said the increased income would "protect our heritage and the parks. When something is cheap, then you don't care about it. But if you pay for something and you're aware that it goes for the upkeep of what you cherish, then that makes it special."

The increases also would help fill a void in EMA coffers left when state lawmakers approved Orange County's financial recovery plan earlier this month, allowing the county to use $12 million annually for 20 years in funds slated for redevelopment, parks, flood control and beaches and harbors.

The proposed fee changes will be considered today at a special joint meeting of the Harbors, Beaches and Parks Commission and the Orange County Historical Commis-
