recreation plan. City staff said the input was different from what they heard when research started last year.

An Oct. 17 hearing also showed that residents' wishes had changed, commissioners said.

As the commissioners looked at the priorities they had chosen, chair Todd Fernandez said, "I'm comfortable given the input we got from the [Oct. 17] workshop."

Parks and rec department manager Jim Teixeira said he didn't want people to get the impression that the teen center was a low priority. The center was listed arbitrarily as the last third-tier project in the recre-
